	everyone gets that chance easily, and if I can play even a small part in making that dream come true for someone, it honestly means a lot to me. I see it as giving a little piece of hope. How do you best describe yourself?	I would describe myself as a loyal, genuine, and caring person who truly values the people around me. I love being around happy, positive energy, and I think I bring a sense of calm and comfort into a room — not loud, but warm and steady. I'm more of an introvert, but when I'm with people I love, I open up and become the most talkative, goofy version of myself. My friends would say I'm the kind of person who's always there — not necessarily the one who says much, but the one who'll sit beside you and make sure you never feel alone. I don't believe in forcing people to open up; I believe in being a safe space for them to do so when they're ready. I care deeply about growth — I want to give myself the best life possible and live as my higher self, the person I dream of becoming. I believe that if there's a will, there's always a way, and I try to live by that every day. Helping others means a lot to me because I know how powerful it is when someone chooses to make another person's life a little lighter. It's a small act that can ripple into something so meaningful. I'm proud of how hard I've worked at school — being top of my class makes me feel like all my effort is paying off. In my free time, I love knitting, crocheting, reading, and writing. I'm especially obsessed with Egyptian and Greek mythology — I could talk about it for hours. Writing is something I'm passionate about; I even have a space online where I share my literary pieces. I take care of myself by spending time in solitude, especially on Sundays, to recharge and reconnect with my thoughts. I like having a plan and structure, but I still try to stay open and optimistic about where life takes me. I hope that when people think of me, they remember someone loyal, supportive, thoughtful, and full of love
